If it does start catching fire or smoking, I have another bag of sand that I can quickly dump into the container and closing the lid, and hope for the best. I'm going to get a fire extinguisher as well. Steel melts at 2000 degrees fahrenheit, not sure if its enough to contain a lithium battery fire, combined with sand. Is this a good idea?

A thick steel box is better but also not guaranteed to contain a fire. Advantages of both are that in case of a fire, exploding, overheated cells won't spread the fire to other areas with more flammable materials. And if the bag or box has handles you can possibly move the battery outside, for instance with the help of a broom stick.

The Importance of Fireproof Coatings in Qatar. Fireproof coatings are vital for several reasons: Structural Integrity: Steel loses a significant portion of its load-bearing capacity when exposed to high temperatures. Fireproof coatings help to maintain the structural integrity of steel structures during a fire by insulating the steel from heat.

The Luna advanced charger is probably the gold standard here, as it monitors voltage and has auto-shutoff for 80, 90, and 100%. (be sure to get the match to your battery voltage). Right now I just use a smart plug with energy monitoring, programmed to auto-shutoff when it starts trickle-charging, at about 90% capacity -- it's not as ideal as a voltage monitor, but it was also under ...
